1.0 INTRODUCTION

The Experimental Sounding Rocket Association (ESRA) host and support the International Rocket Engineering Competition (IREC), a week-long event which is the world's largest university rocket engineering competition. The IREC has a long history of inspiring student design teams from across the country and around the world to launch their dreams and rockets high into the air.

1.1 BACKGROUND

The “smoke and fire,” noise, high speeds, and sleek aerodynamics of rocketry encourage students to pursue science, technology, and mathematics-based careers. They have "Rocket Fever!", and competition motivates them to extend themselves beyond the classroom to design and build the rockets themselves. These students also learn to work as a team, solving real world problems under the same pressures they'll experience in their future careers.

ESRA held the first annual IREC in 2006 in Utah. The competition achieved international status in 2011 when Canadian and Brazilian universities threw their hats in the ring. These schools have since been joined by others from every inhabited continent. In fact, the competition has grown rapidly since 2013, becoming the largest collegiate level rocket engineering competition in the world in 2014. The number of participating student competitors in 2025 is over 7,300 and come from over 172 colleges and universities. From 2017-2024, the IREC was hosted by Spaceport America in Las Cruces, NM, and was known as the Spaceport America Cup. In 2025, the IREC moved to Spaceport Midland, Texas.

1.2 PURPOSE AND SCOPE

This document primarily defines the schedule on which participants in the IREC must submit required deliverables to the event organizers to be considered "timely" in scoring. The impact of timeliness on scoring is described for each respective deliverable in Section 2.6 of the IREC Rules & Requirements Document, maintained on the ESRA website (<https://www.esrocket.org/documents-and-forms>) Furthermore, this document, integrates other information useful to participants, such as the deadlines for early, on-time, or late-payment of fees, due dates for required waivers/forms, and the detailed event schedule.

1.1 REVISION

The Integrated Master Schedule Document is a living document and will be updated as needed throughout the year leading up to the event. The most up to date version will always be maintained on the ESRA website (<https://www.esrocket.org/documents-and-forms>). Participants should always verify they are working to the correct version by checking the Effective Date recorded on the header of their copy matches the version currently stored on the ESRA website. Updates to the IREC Integrated Master Schedule Document will always be announced via e-mail and other means.

1.2 DOCUMENTATION

The following documents include standards, guidelines, schedules, or required standard forms. The documents listed in this section are either applicable to the extent specified in this document or contain reference information useful in the application of this document.
